OUR DAY OF REST AND found his true calling. WORSHIP.

Red-Handed Communism Robbing Our Children of What God Ordained.

'Tis not enough to worship God alone, Deep in the closet of a hidden nook; 'Tis not the low, self-abagasted gross That reads aright the great life-giving Book

Ye whose hearts are not touched with love, by the music of the church-going bell and to whose soul its blended power of voice and spirit brings no hope, will find nothing in these lines which you can under-But to you for whom the soft sounds of a Sunday morning's bell awakens such tender emotions as no words can por tray, to you for whom back the years com sweeping, filled with the gentlest memories, filled with vanished loves and banished treasures, to you and to you, read on:

What hand can touch the strings so fine; Nearer and nearer comes, till o'er the trees it hangs and breathes in soul-tisolving air." The dissolving tones of the church-going bell. The weights of life are constantly running down and sleep was given to wind up again the vital machinery, but it has long been realized by the tired ones of earth that sleep alone is not enough. God saw that, in the beginning, and kindly decreed that one day in seven should be a day of rest. Welcome it comes to the wearied sons of toil as they gather about the hearthstones of peaceful homes for a full day's rest. "Hail, Holy Day' the blessing from above Brightens thy presence like a smile of love, 8 moothing, like oil upon a stormy sra. Thy roughest waves of human destiny— Cheering the good, and to the poor oppress's Bearing the promise of their hevenly rest."

It is the men and the women who ten down rather than those who seek to build up, that attract the most notice and receive the kindest patronage. The spirit of rednism is already seen in this land of ours. It seeks not only to strike down our homes, but to tear down our day of worship and of rest, and to hush its Sabbath bells. Year by year the Sabbath that we so loved and revered in days agone is being imperceptibly taken away. The magna charts of virtue, home-love and purity is this day, and those who worship at its altars should contend against the ingratiating influences that would deny its benefits and its consolations; its rests, its songs and worship and its bells and peacefulness. (), sweeter than the marriage-feast, O, sweeter than the marriage-least,
'Tis awester far to me,
To walk together to the church
With a goodly company;
And all together pray
While each to his great Father bends,
Old men and babes and loving frie
And youths and maidens gay.

The Sabbath morning's bells, how some touched within us as we are carried back in To the Editor of the Eagle years and leagues to green hills and rolling ivers, to nestling villages and purling brooks to hear words that echo in the heart No pleading guilty to-day. forever and to feel the warmth of smiles of faces that now are only dust. Those bells': "With easy force they open all the cells Where mem'ry afept. Wherever I hear A kindred melody the scene recurs. And with it all its pleasures and its pains

Each Sabbath day should be one of rest and quiet. The whirling wheels, the rushing trains, the busy mart and all secular affairs should cease. Those who work seven days of every seven, deliberately weaken their own powers. The creator who planned this world of ours with all its elements and its inhabitants, who taught the the swelling ocean to know its bounds, who set our fields and prairies with their verdure and bloom, but directed for them a rest and and a winter's gloom, who placed the torches of heaven, and holds the mighty universe. He surely knows what is best for His loved offspring men, and what are the are among these needs, who that has ever experienced can deny, who that has ever felt the solace of music or the inspiration of immortal desires and longing gainsay. It comes like a dove direct from Heaven, only

"Six days stern inbor shuts the poor From nature's careless bacquet hall: The Seventh, an angel opes the door. And, smiling, welcomes all!"

But for rich and poor there is but one rea rest. To lie abed Sunday morning or to lounge about home all day affords not the rest that men and women require. For one the very sight of her household suggests care, and for the other a laxity that becomes tiresome. The only way is to turn the stream of one's thoughts into new channels. Home music and home companionship may do this, but not so surely as to gather with loved ones and neighbors in sweet companionship to where the church-going bell calls to worship and to prayer.

"How oft the music of those village bells, Failing at intervals upon the ear In cadence sweet now dying all away. Now pealing loud again and louder still, Clear and sonorous as the gale comes on " attended with the loss of life, yet it is obvious the perpetrators must have anticipated the possibility of a member of innocent beings being subjected to a sudden and cruel death. The crime heretofore partakes of the character of murder. It is difficult to conceive what possible end or purpose the authors hoped to attain. Under the correlation of cause and effect, it mainly confirms the theory that the crime was of a Hibernian origin.
